A number of causes have been attributed to the existence of child labor. What has been cited as its greatest single cause is poverty. For impoverished households, a child's work income is usually crucial for his or her own survival or for that of the household. Income of working children, even a small amount, may be between 25 to 40% of the household income. The lack of meaningful alternatives such as the lack of affordable schools or quality education is another primary factor and concern. Many communities, particularly rural areas where child labor is prevalent, do not possess adequate school facilities. Other circumstances would include the distance of some available schools and the difficulty of reaching them. Such conditions would entail that children would have nothing better to do.
