

Imagining Situations or Events –

SECOND CONDITIONAL

Page 325

The second conditional is a structure used for talking about unreal situations in the present or in the future.

Second conditional sentences consist of two clauses, an “if ” clause and a main clause.

The structure is: If + past simple, ... would + infinitive.

Examples: “If I had a million dollars, I would buy an enormous house”, “If I were you, I would study English”, etc.

Repetition Drill

Talking About Purpose – IN ORDER, SO THAT, FOR THE PURPOSE OF

We use “so that” and “in order to” to talk about purpose.

For example, “I’ll go by train so that I will arrive earlier”, “I sent him a message so that he would know I was going out of the country”,

“In order to pass the exam, you need to study hard”, etc.

We often leave out “that” after “so” in informal situations: I cooked for breakfast so we’ll have something to eat.

“For the purpose of” is followed by a gerund. For example, “I will study hard for the purpose of passing the test”.

“For the purpose of” can usually be shortened to “to” and we replace the gerund with an infinitive.

For example, “I will study hard to pass the test”.
