Making an opening statement

Read the following and answer the question.

An opening statement would normally be made by the company who requested the meeting, or if one company acts as hosts for the meeting, the top ranking member of that team should make the opening statement, which is the most common case. It might be made, however, by each side, or jointly done by two high level executives (one from each side), which might go something like this: "We expect you to come to an agreement because our companies put a high value on doing business together. We know you can do it."

Let's focus on the most common case. What do you think an opening statement should include? And suggest phrases for each of the items included.

Giving an opening proposal

Read the following aloud.

If you start with good first impressions in a negotiation, it will affect the whole process, from the first proposal to the final agreement. These opening stages, especially between different cultures, are very important. The opening proposal should emphasize mutual benefits, be positive and create interest.

> How to handle common rejections to first proposals.

What would you do if they said

- 1. "Your offer is too expensive."
- 2. "We don't have that kind of budget."
- 3. "That's not what we are looking for."
- 4. "Your offer is not competitive."

Match the rejections (1 - 4) with the possible way to handle (a - d).

a. Propose deferred payment schedules or split the order into smaller units or mini-orders to meet current budget limitations.

b. Ask what they are looking for, and insist on specifics. Keep asking questions until you have a clear understanding of the other side's real needs, then repackage your offer in light of the new information received.c. Avoid lowering your price until you learn more about what the other party is looking for. Find out if the objection is due to your price offer or if it reflects other factors.

d. Ask what is meant by the phrase 'not being competitive'. Look for weaknesses in the competitors' offers and stress your strengths, the unique features of your products/services.
